BASICS OF GARDENING FOR SUSTAINABLE HEALTH AND SOCIETY

ABOUT THE COURSE

This course will lead to the knowledge of basic requirements for gardening, types of gardens and how to manage the garden and also benefits of gardening. It will help the learners to grow their own food, maintain their garden.

The "Basics of Gardening for Sustainable Health and Society" course aims to provide students with the skills and knowledge required to design and manage sustainable gardens. In addition to promoting environmental sustainability, it highlights the advantages of gardening for individual health and communal well-being. Students will gain knowledge about how to create productive, ecologically friendly, and wildlife-friendly gardens by thoroughly examining gardening techniques, soil health, plant selection, water management, and organic practices. An all-encompassing overview of sustainable gardening techniques is provided by the course, which also includes seasonal maintenance, urban and community gardening, and permaculture principles.

SUMMARY REPORT

The course "Basics of Gardening for Sustainable Health and Society" aimed to provide students with essential knowledge and practical skills in sustainable gardening. Topics covered included soil health, plant selection, organic practices, water management, and other key areas, all aimed at promoting personal health, community well-being, and environmental sustainability.

The course facilitator Prof. Mahesh Deshmukh skillfully coordinated the online learning experience, ensuring students gained a comprehensive experience.

The course began with an introduction to the principles and benefits of sustainable gardening. Students learned about soil health, focusing on soil types, composition, and preparation techniques. They also explored plant selection and planning, learning how to choose appropriate plants, design garden layouts, and implement companion planting and crop rotation.

Organic gardening practices were a major focus, with discussions on natural fertilizers, composting, and non-chemical pest and disease management. Water management techniques, including efficient watering, rainwater harvesting, and drought-resistant gardening, were also thoroughly covered. Practical insights into growing vegetables and herbs, flower gardening for aesthetics and biodiversity, and the benefits of container and raised bed gardening were provided.

Urban gardening and community gardens were explored, highlighting the challenges and benefits of gardening in small spaces and urban environments. The course also introduced permaculture and sustainable landscaping principles, along with strategies for creating habitats for wildlife and supporting local ecosystems.

The course concluded with practical guidance on garden maintenance and seasonal care, emphasizing regular tasks, adapting to climate changes, and ensuring long-term garden sustainability.

The review lectures provided students with a solid foundation in sustainable gardening practices. The course encouraged critical engagement with gardening techniques and emphasized the importance of sustainable practices for health, community well-being, and environmental sustainability. The comprehensive and interactive nature of the course helped students appreciate the role of gardening in creating a healthier, more sustainable society.
