Intersection of IPR with Academic Writings and Literary works

On interaction with students and educators, it was observed that Intellectual property rights from the point view of a student or an educator is being viewed with a limited angle i.e. patent of drugs, process or scientific inventions, indications etc. This is because the access to this content has been limited in the areas of law and business. Diving deeper into this arena a short survey was conducted that revealed lot of misconceptions and shorter vision on IPR and Creative Commons. Further being an educator we all are involved in various research projects, articles, writing thesis, creating new pedagogical content etc but often fail to provide it's a wider platform along with recognition. Thus, literary writings to a very great extent even today rely upon publishing house for copyrights that in turn limits the accessibility as the works are then available on paid basis. Thus, developing an Open Education Resource considering the Universal Design for Learning is expected to bridge the gap.

Intersection of IPR with Academic Writings and Literary works

“Can my work be copyrighted? Can I be credited for this piece of writing? Can I be credited for this design of lesson plan?”

If you have any such doubts, this course would help resolve all your queries, and intends to fill this knowledge gap.

INTERSECTION OF IPR WITH ACADEMIC WRITINGS AND LITERARY WORKS

ABOUT THE COURSE

“Can my work be copyrighted? Can I be credited for this piece of writing? Can I be credited for this design of the lesson plan? Can I publish my thesis? What would be the tentative cost of the same? These are a few of the common inner voices of an academician that often go unheard or remain mere inner voices, especially in developing countries. The education and the publication ecosystem demonstrate a wide knowledge gap in terms of literary works in the East and West world. The knowledge gap in these countries with respect to copyrights of literary works, academic writings and their licensing is way undermined despite being a talent powerhouse. It is one of the major fall-outs of the education ecosystem that largely bifurcates the knowledge areas with pre-defined disciplines and norms. The degree of autonomy, relatedness and competence in the ecosystem is limited. However, with increased cross-country collaborations and the need for open educational resources, imparting and developing a healthy licensing culture vital.

Addressing this niche area, the course intends to serve the instrumentalist function of filling the knowledge gap. The course would be largely based on Bloom Taxonomy and involve Project Based Learning to sharpen the creative side of the learner. Further considering the wide spectrum of the audience the content so developed will be based on the principles of Universal Design for Learning ensuring the effectiveness of the course so developed

SUMMARY REPORT

The course "Intersection of IPR with Academic Writings and Literary Works" provides a thorough exploration of Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) and their application in academic and literary contexts. Beginning with an introduction to copyright, patents, trademarks, and trade secrets, students learn the fundamental principles and legal frameworks essential for protecting creative and scholarly works. Modules delve into specific issues such as copyright ownership in academic articles and literary creations, international copyright treaties, and strategies for patent licensing in academic research. Discussions also cover trademark registration for literary works, management of trade secrets, and challenges in digital publishing and online platforms, including digital rights management and combating piracy. Students explore ethical considerations in using others' intellectual property and analyze case studies to reinforce learning. Overall, the course equips students with practical knowledge and ethical insights needed to navigate complex IPR landscapes in academic and literary environments effectively.
